THE fatal calemity on board the steamer Elyin when at Sugon, whereby four of the crew lost their lives, should act as a warning | held, at the Civil Haspital, on the body of a to shippwhere and mariners too. Of course everyone knows that the holds of ships are liable to become charged with mophitic air, and with some kinds of cargoes it is impossible to prevent foul gases generating, but in many cases better ventilation might be provided. The gases collected in the hold of the Elgin were exceptionally doubly, and the poor fellows who succumbed to their poison showed great heroism in trying to rescue each other. Vainly did Captain MILLER, guessing that instant death awaited those who ventured down into the fatal hold, note was given was $1,500 all of which had been should be held, and if no complaint was found the call them back. Heedless of the peril they were exposing thomselves to, they followed each other until two of them succeeded in a considerable number of debts behind her. The -attaching lines to those lying below, and thus saved one life, at a cost of three others on her behalf, he being her rent collector - property while at sea. This sad affair is deeply to be deplored, and Plaintiff was non-suited. we can only hope it will have the effect, by the publicity given to it, of inducing shipmasters and their crews to act with great day but the defendant, the master of the Frie- bung out of a varnish cask containing about 16 caution in descending a hold which there is reason to think may be charged with bad hir. No suspicion to that effect was entertained in the case of the Elgin: Such occurrences as that on board this steamer are rare indeed. and hence the crow were utterly unprepared to meet the noxious gases they encountered, It is to be hoped also that charterers will endeavour, as far as possible, not to load ships with damp cargo, as the official analysis showed that the poisonous air originated from the moist condition of the pepper and mangrove bark shipped. The case is one that cannot be too widely made known.
